

I/ECMHC Public Health Pilot Evaluation Logic Model

Theory of Change

Consultation delivered to Public Health administrators and staff will improve staff knowledge of mental health and social-emotional well-being of families and children, and skills in engaging families. In turn, it is expected that improvements in staff well-being and relationships with families and children will lead to families who are more engaged and receptive to health and nutrition services. Long-term, it is expected that staff in Public Health programs will have a greater capacity to perform their duties, meet outcomes for children and families, and engage families in a consultative, supportive, culturally-appropriate manner. In turn, families will seek out Public Health services, leading to healthier mothers and children, and helping to identify issues to be addressed early.
